From Resilience to a Place to Call Home

From Resilience to a Place to Call Home
When our team first met this client nearly two years ago, her resilience and determination immediately stood out. Despite facing significant challenges, she remained committed to her recovery and worked hard to build a brighter future.

Today, she is approaching three years of sobriety and has become a source of encouragement and support for others. She regularly supports women at a local detox center, helps women new to recovery connect with community resources, and participates in prayer, support, and mental health groups.

Along the way, she also found employment through a connection made during her journey with SAWC. What began as an opportunity has grown into a career, and she is now training to become a team leader.
Now, she has reached another exciting milestone: she is housed and her new home is fully furnished!

Her journey is a powerful reminder that housing is just one part of building a stable future. With determination, community support, and opportunities to grow, people can accomplish incredible things. We are grateful to have been part of her journey and cannot wait to see what comes next.